Historical Background

The final two years of Barack H. Obama's presidency were overshadowed by the unprecedentedly rancorous campaign to succeed him in the White House. The 2014 mid-term elections saw the opposition Republican party strengthen its majority in the House of Representatives and win back the majority in the Senate for the first time since losing it to the Democrats in the 2006 mid-term elections. The party's electoral success emboldened the party leadership's obstructionist tendencies.

The sudden death of conservative Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia on February 13, 2016 plunged the nation's highest court into the murk of electoral politics, from which it is generally inoculated. With nearly a year remaining in his term, President Obama nominated Merrick Garland, then chief judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the Washington D.C. Circuit to the seat vacated by Justice Scalia. Though unusual, a Supreme Court nomination in a general election year was by no means unprecedented and newspaper editorial boards across the country joined the President and Democrats in the Congress calling for the Senate Republican leadership to fulfill its role in the appointment process by facilitating a vote on the nomination. Republicans, mindful of the profound implications of replacing a reliable conservative stalwart like Scalia with even a reputedly moderate jurist such as Garland and banking on the hope that their candidate might prevail in November, dug in, arguing on the one hand that the voters should be afforded the chance to have their say before a new Justice is confirmed, while also making the case that, the testimony of the Obama administration notwithstanding, Merrick Garland was no moderate and his accession to the Court would exacerbate the sort of judicial activism that is anathema to their governing philosophy.

War or Peace?

Withdraw from Afghanistan and Rise of ISIL

Fifteen years after the attacks of September 11 and the subsequent wars engaged in Afghanistan and Iraq, the United States was finally seeing its large military contingents abroad begin to come back home. In his address before the Congress in 2015, President Obama remarked, "For the first time since 9/11, our combat mission in Afghanistan is over. Six years ago, nearly 180,000 American troops served in Iraq and Afghanistan. Today, fewer than 15,000 remain." But even as the country was drawing down the substantial numbers of ground forces fighting in Iraq and Afghanistan, the civil war in Syria and continued factional unrest in Iraq combined to facilitate the rise of the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (variously termed ISIL, ISIS, the Islamic State, and Daesh).

Consonant with his philosophy of statesmanship and internationalism, President Obama advocated a broad, coalition-based strategy to combat the specter of ISIL and support moderate actors on the Syrian stage, rather than committing large numbers of U.S. ground forces to further multi-year foreign commitments. He thus called on the Congress to authorize U.S. military operations against ISIL: "In Iraq and Syria, American leadership—including our military power—is stopping ISIL's advance . . . We are also supporting a moderate opposition in Syria that can help us in this effort . . . And tonight, I call on this Congress to show the world that we are united in this mission by passing a resolution to authorize the use of force against ISIL."

Another major item on the Obama administration's foreign policy agenda was the ongoing negotiation with the Islamic Republic of Iran aimed at putting a halt to that nation's nuclear weapons program in exchange for sanctions relief and normalization of its foreign relations. As the administration worked to finalize a deal with Iranian negotiators, Republicans in the Congress joined with the government of Israel, the United States' strongest ally in the middle east, in vehemently opposing the deal. In

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell

Speaker of the House John Boehner an affront to the President's position as head of state and constitutionally mandated responsibility for conducting foreign relations, Republican leaders in the House of Representatives invited Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu to address the United States Congress on the subject of the Iranian nuclear deal without consulting the President. The Republican move and the Israeli Prime Minister's response incurred a strong rebuke from senior Obama administration officials and the Iran nuclear deal remained a thorny issue during the 2016 Presidential campaign.

Economic Trends and Conditions

As the United States economy continued its gradual but steady recovery from the economic turmoil engendered by the 2008 financial crisis, the President continued to tout the success of his administration's policies in bringing the nation back from the economic abyss and encouraged the Congress to work with the administration in devising policies designed to broaden the scope of the economic recovery to include more working and middle-class Americans. In his 2015 address before a joint session of Congress, President Obama advocated a series of policy proposals designed to encourage what he termed "middle class economics." These included expanding access to affordable child care, guaranteeing paid sick leave, enactment of legislation requiring equal pay for equal work, increased funding for skilled job training, and infrastructure development.

The President continued these themes in his 2016 address before the Congress, in which he again stated the economic gains achieved during the eight years of his Presidency: "We're in the longest streak of private-sector job creation in history. More than 14 million new jobs; an unemployment rate cut in half. Manufacturing has created nearly 900,000 new jobs in the past six years." Reflecting on the rapid pace of change to the nature of the American economy, the President encouraged the Congress to work with him to develop a program that would provide retraining for jobs in high-demand sectors for workers receiving unemployment insurance.

Landmark U.S. Supreme Court Decisions

Zivotofsky v. Kerry, held that the State Department was justified in its actions when it listed "Jerusalem" instead of "Israel" on a passport of a child born to U.S. citizens in Jerusalem, stating that to do otherwise would infringe on the Presidential power to recognize foreign nations as related to consular reports, 576 U.S. (2015)

Los Angeles v. Patel, held that searching hotel registries without a warrant is unconstitutional, in that it doesn't provide the opportunity for hotel operators to perform pre-compliance review of the Los Angeles Municipal Code requirement for keeping such records, 576 U.S. (2015)

Arizona State Legislature v. Arizona Independent Redistricting Comm'n, concluded that the creation and use of an independent committee tasked with Congressional redistricting is not in violation of the Elections Clause, 576 U.S. (2015)

Williams-Yulee v. Florida Bar, held that personal solicitations of campaign funds in a judicial election are prohibited, and the restriction of such solicitation is not in violation of the First Amendment, 575 U.S. (2015)

Walker v. Texas Div., Sons of Confederate Veterans, Inc., held that specialty license plates, in this case a design displaying the Confederate flag, fall under government speech. As a result, states can decline to produce the plate design, 576 U.S. (2015)

Armstrong v. Exceptional Child Center, Inc., held that Medicaid providers do not have a private right of action against a state if Congress has not created rights under the Medicaid Act, 575 U.S. (2015)

Reed v. Town of Gilbert, held that the restriction of signage, which involved the size, number, duration of placement and location, under the Gilbert, Arizona Sign Code ordinance is a violation of the First Amendment 576 U.S. (2015)

Michigan v. Environmental Protection Agency, held that the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) must consider costs when regulating pollution emitting from power plants and in its failure to do so the agency interpreted the Clean Air Act unreasonably, 576 U.S. (2015)

Obergefell v. Hodges, held that the fundamental right to marry is guaranteed to same-sex couples by the Due Process Clause and the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, 576 U.S. (2015)

Bank Markazi v. Peterson, held that statutes that direct a specific result in a single pending case do not violate the separation of powers, in this case, the passage of the Iran Threat Reduction and Syria Human Rights Act of 2012 in response to plaintiffs asking for judgements for death or injury as a result of terrorism by Iran, 578 U.S. (2016)

Evenwel v. Abbott, held that allotting legislative districts based on total population is permitted and the "one person, one vote" rule of the Equal Protection Clause lets a state plan its legislative districts based on total population, rather than registered voter population, 578 U.S. (2016)

Friedrichs v. California Teachers Ass'n, affirmed the judgment of the lower court that school districts send notice to union nonmembers, requiring these public school employees to either join the union, pay fees equivalent to union member dues, and/or annually opt-out of the nonchargeable portion of the fee, 578 U.S. (2016)

Luis v. United States, held that the freezing of a defendant's assets in a pretrial motion would violate the right to counsel in that the defendant must have funds to pay for counsel of their choice, 578 U.S. (2016)

Puerto Rico v. Sánchez Valle, held that the Double Jeopardy Clause prevents those prosecuted of a crime in Puerto Rico from being prosecuted of the same crimes by the federal court and vice versa; determined that the states get their sovereign power from a source other than the federal government and territories of the United States do not, 579 U.S. (2016)

United States v. Texas, affirmed the standing of the lower courts that Texas and additional states had standing to file a suit against implementation of Deferred Action for Parents of Americans and Lawful Permanent Residents (DAPA) program, who argued that it violated the Administrative Procedure Act, because it had not gone through the notice-and-comment process, and argued that it also violated the Take Care Clause, which centers on Presidential powers, 579 U.S. (2016)

Utah v. Strieff, held that evidence seized incidentally during an arrest for an outstanding warrant can be used against a defendant in court proceedings, even if the warrant was found during an investigatory stop, 579 U.S. [2016]

Whole Woman's Health v. Hellerstadt, ruled that a Texas law requiring that abortion providers have difficult to obtain admitting privileges at a hospital within 30 miles placed an undue burden on women seeking abortions, 579 U.S. (2016)
